Hi everyone, Alexis Avila here, founder of Prepped and Polished, LLC. Now, ParentingSquad.com recently featured me in their SAT essay article, which talked about the Good Morning America report of a 14-year-old high school student, Milo Beckman, who researched the alleged correlation between longer SAT essays and higher SAT essay scores.

Now while SAT essay graders will certainly appreciate you filling up both allotted pages of your SAT essay, if they don't see any substance in your SAT essay, they won't hesitate to give you a bad mark. Now to go a step further, I find that SAT essay structure is another essential component for an SAT essay grader.

So, for example, it's really important to have a strong opening introductory paragraph because SAT essay graders are reading hundreds of essays. So they get bored after the hundred and first. You got to grab their attention right away. So overall, sure, it's important to have a pretty long SAT essay, about two pages, but also have a well-structured essay and have a lot of substance in your essay and I guarantee you'll have a good SAT essay score.

Good luck, and I'll talk to you soon.
